Commentary

In December the NAV per share was up 1.7%, the share price was up 1.4%, and the MSCI World Health Care Index was up 2.8%.

December bore witness to a rebound in global healthcare equities after a highly volatile November. All subsectors moved higher in the month, with the exception of biotechnology stocks, which fell 2.0% during the month. Of the positive advancers, the most notable move was in pharmaceutical stocks which rose 3.8% in December.

Whilst the portfolio recorded positive gains in December, the disparate moves in biotech and pharma culminated in underperformance in the period given the relative overweight and underweight positioning, respectively, versus the benchmark.

The top contributor in December was in fact a pharmaceutical stock. Eli Lilly moved up almost 11% after the company guided to better than expected financials in 2017. Multiple broker upgrades followed the event.

Another top contributor was the medical device company, Boston Scientific. The stock rebounded in December with the rest of the med-tech subsector, which had seen a swoon during the third quarter and from the U.S. Presidential election.

Finally, the last significant contributor of note in the month was the Swiss-based biotechnology leader, Actelion. The company was approached by Johnson & Johnson for engagement in acquisition talks in November but headlines and rumors about the take-out price and potentially other suitors pushed the stock higher by 12.5%.
