Commentary

In February the NAV per share was up 7.3%, the share price was up 11.2%, and the MSCI World Health Care Index was up 7.1%.

Fundamentals were front and center for healthcare stocks in February. As the sector rolled through earnings reports, investors grew numb to politics and instead focused on the positive outlook for the healthcare industry and as such, healthcare equities rose across the globe.

Positive contribution came from all sub-sectors, most notably biotechnology (both mid- and large-cap), pharmaceuticals (both specialty and large-cap, modestly offset by generics), healthcare services, and medical devices. The large-cap biotech stock, Biogen, had a strong month, rising 15%. Two important events occurred at the turn of the month – solid earnings and better than expected guidance for 2017, and the spin-off of the company's hemophilia business (which began trading on February 2). Momentum continued for Wright Medical Group, a medical device company, as they reported solid earnings and better than expected guidance for 2017; the stock reached a 52-week high in the period. Solid pipeline news in January was followed by the announcement that the mid-cap biotechnology company, Incyte, would be added to the S&P 500 Index. This stock also reached a 52-week high in the period.

Notable detractors were few. Positions in the portfolio with greater than -10 bps in absolute losses counted only two. The biosimilar developer, Coherus Biosciences, fell after the company announced a secondary stock offering at a notable discount to the company's share price. The share price for another generic player, Momenta Pharmaceuticals, was lower after the company announced its contracted manufacturer for generic Copaxone (glatiramer acetate injection for multiple sclerosis) had received a warning letter from the U.S. Food and Drug Administration over several manufacturing deficiencies.
