Commentary

In May the NAV per share was up 1.5%, the share price was up 3.7%, and the MSCI World Health Care Index was up 2.7%.

Positive returns in May were primarily generated by investments across pharmaceutical, health care services, life science tools, medical devices, and emerging biotechnology stocks. NAV underperformance versus the benchmark was driven by underweight positioning in large cap pharmaceuticals and mixed stock picking in large cap biotechnology.

Atopic dermatitis (AD), more commonly known as eczema, is an inflammatory skin condition characterized by a red, itchy, and scaly rash that in its severe form can be debilitating to patients. The approval of Dupixent (dupilumab) for the treatment of AD has been a treatment revolution for those afflicted. The recent launch of the drug in the U.S. has gone even better than investors' already lofty expectations, propelling shares of Regeneron Pharmaceuticals higher by 25% (in local currency) in the month.

Puma Biotechnology has been developing a novel breast cancer therapy called neratinib for patients who have had surgery. It has been a tumultuous story over the past 4 years, but the company finally received the support of a U.S. Food and Drug Administration advisory committee who voted in favor of approving the drug. The stock almost doubled in response.

The largest detractor in May was Alexion Pharmaceuticals. More unexpected management changes on the heels of a previous sales scandal pushed the stock to a new 52-week low. We believe the company is extremely undervalued at these levels. Negative contribution also came from Wright Medical Group. Shares in the medical device maker fell after the company's first quarter results were below analysts' estimates. The move down was exacerbated by profit taking as the stock had nearly doubled off its lows over the past 12 months.
